1. Introduction*

The aim of this paper is to provide an interlinearized narrative text in Standard Malay (ISO 639-3 zsm; henceforth referred to as ‘Malay’), which was collected by means of a stimulus-elicitation methodology for compiling corpora for the Social Cognition Parallax Interview Corpus (SCOPIC) project (see Introduction of this volume for the details of the project). Malay is a Western Malayo-Polynesian language of the Austronesian language family spoken in Malaysia, Singapore and Brunei. The text provided below was collected from two Malaysian speakers.

To provide a minimal amount of information about the language to assist in deciphering the text below, the basic word order of Malay is SVO. Modifiers of nouns follow the noun, except for quantity expressions such as numerals and quantifiers, which precede the noun. Bare nominals are number-neutral, that is, they can refer to either one or more than one entity. However, reduplication can be used to indicate the latter interpretation. Malay has two overt voice-related prefixes, namely meN- (active) and di- (passive). The capital N in meN- represents a nasal archiphoneme whose realization is determined by the following sound. The prefixation meN- involves the deletion of the stem-initial p, t, s and k. In the text below, these deleted consonants are indicated in []. Malay uses Latin alphabets for its orthography. The readers are referred to Nomoto and Soh (2019) for an article-length overview of the language written in English.¹

* The research reported in this paper was conducted under the JSPS grant ‘Program for Advancing Strategic International Networks to Accelerate the Circulation of Talented Researchers’ offered to Tokyo University of Foreign Studies for a project entitled ‘A collaborative network for usage-based research on lesser-studied languages’ and the ILCAA Joint Research Project ‘Research on Social Cognition Based on SCOPIC: the Social Cognition Parallax Interview Corpus’.

¹ Asmah (2009) is a good reference grammar for those who can read Malay. No reference grammar of Malay exists that is written in English or Japanese. Some alternative resources include Koh (1990), Mintz (2002) and Nomoto (2020).

The remainder of the paper is structured as follows. The data collection methodology is explained in section 2 and the text itself is provided in section 3.

2. Data collection method

The data was collected at Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia (Selangor, Malaysia) by Asako Shiohara and the author in 2017, with the help of Kartini Abd. Wahab. A total of six speakers participated in the recording. These speakers are referred to by numbers as in Speaker 1, 2, 3, etc. Two recording sessions were conducted. Speakers 1–3 participated in Session 1 and Speakers 4–6 in Session 2.

The data was collected following the procedures outlined in Barth and Evans (2017). Their ‘Family Problems Picture Task’ uses 16 picture cards as stimuli to collect controlled yet naturalistic narratives. Each session consists of four task phases:

1. DESCRIPTION: The participants are asked to describe the 16 stimulus picture cards one by one. The cards are presented in a random order.
2. PROBLEM-SOLVING: The same two participants from Phase 1 are asked to sort the cards into a coherent narrative order.
3. THIRD-PERSON NARRATION: The same two participants are asked to tell the story they have constructed to a third participant, who has not seen the cards or heard the discussions that took place during Phases 1 and 2.
4. FIRST-PERSON NARRATION: The participants are asked to choose one character from among the cards and tell the story from that character’s point of view.

Table 1 summarizes the task phases included in our data and the participants involved in each phase. The interlinearized text provided in the next section is from file KL201736. The file consists of 536 tokens (including punctuation marks) and its recording duration is 4:53.
